Patrick DeGrave's brother was still in a medically induced coma at a Wisconsin hospital when he spoke to local news. Standing in front of the crew at Fox 6 Milwaukee, he was ready to go public, and the tape of the vapor burner he held up to the cameras was the reason for his brother's significant damage to his heart and lungs. The story that aired was also reported by the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel and the national Fox News website, among others. In every story there is a black box with a candy-colored logo, reading: Dank Vapes. Vaping is most often associated with companies like JUUL and Blu, which make products for nicotine evaporation, but the vape cartridge, which According to DeGrave is responsible for his brother's illness - we do not call his brother out of respect for his privacy - is something completely different. DeGrave's vapor product showed reporters that it had been distilled from cannabis. But it was also apparently made by dank vapes company – an elusive, black market brand that is so hard to pin down as a pair. This story, originally published August 19, 2019, includes the update below. Dank Vapes is probably the biggest conspiracy in the distillate community. Editorial Update – November 15, 2019: When this story was first published in August 2019, there were fewer than 200 cases of vaping related lung damage. At that time, the condition had no name. It was not clear what products were responsible for this and what was in them, which made them so dangerous. Three months later, it's clear that black market THC vaping cartridges play a central role in become vaping related to lung damage, which is currently referred to as e-cigarette, or vaping, a product used for related lung damage (EVALI) by the CDC. Dank Vapes, Vapes, The fake company that this original story examined, came to forensic scrutiny for its role in spreading vaping-related lung damage. CDC reports released since August confirmed the facts presented in this story. In the words of the Cdc's October report, Dank Vapes is not a real company, but the most visible in the class of largely counterfeit brands, with a common packaging that is readily available online. Dank Vapes is not the only product on the black market that has made people sick, but it is the most commonly used product. In September, the CDC released a report describing the spread of EVALI in Wisconsin and Illinois. Fifty-seven out of 86 people with EVALI in this study reported using Dank Vapes. The report in Utah also noted that Dank Vapes were the most popular black market product used by people with EVALI. In November, the CDC announced that vitamin E acetate, a thickening agent that is commonly used for black market vaping products, seems justified by being a chemical of concern. The announcement suggests that vitamin E acetate may be a component of the THC vape cartridges that is responsible for EVALI. When the CDC analyzed samples of pulmonary fluid from 29 patients from 10 states, they found vitamin E acetate in all samples. In our story, published in September, you can find our reports on how vitamin E acetate has penetrated the black market vaping world. As of November 13, 2019, there were 2, 172 confirmed and probable cases of EVALI in 49 states. Forty-two people were killed. Read more about Dank Vapes and EVALI. The original story continues below. Dank Vapes has a logo. You can buy Dank Vapes T-shirts. Sales of Dank Vapes products can be easily seen on Twitter, Instagram or medium. Conversely, he reached out to government agencies, with accounts claiming to sell Dank Vapes, cannabis labs and members of the cannabis industry. Everyone seems to be telling a similar story - that Dank Vapes might be fake. It's a black brand that has inspired online loyalty, but comes with serious risks. They behave like a cannabis company, but they don't actually exist. They are in the packaging industry, says Mark Hoashi, founder of the Doja app, which is Yelp for the hemp industry. These are the only people filling cartridges as Dank Vapes. This is not a single object. It's just people in their garages filling them up and selling them. Myron Ronay, CEO of BelCosta Labs, a laboratory for testing cannabis in California, tells Inverse that they often see products on the black market that contain dangerous levels of myclobutanol - a fungicide. When myclobutanol is heated, it releases toxic fumes, one of which is hydrogen cyanide. Small amounts of HCN are released when smoking cigarettes, but higher doses are fatal. HCN was the main component of Zyklon-B, a gas used in Nazi gas chambers. Unregulated such as dank vapes on the black market, they don't have anyone to check where this line is drawn. It is one of the most discussed pesticides. Pesticides, underground market, says Ronay. DeGrave's house sent ripples through the ripple of this and what was in them, which made them so dangerous. Remember to buy all these fake black market but carts, DANK VAPES, all of this, warned Twitter user @clouttipie, who linked the news segment to DeGrave. Watch out for damp vapes, many of them are fake,' wrote another user, @MarijuanaBlunts. The myth of the real Dank Vapes has allowed hundreds of Dank Vape sellers to escape selling their unlicensed products to consumers – not all of whom are even aware that Dank Vapes is not a single company, but a packaging company, without quality control or supervision. Dankbustersofficial, an Instagram account user with nearly 17,000 followers, put it this way in the Inverse: Dank Vapes is probably the biggest conspiracy in the distillate community. These comments may not go far enough. As our reports have shown, Dank Vapes is one of the largest conspiracies in all marijuana. DeGrave shows cassettes in the Dank Vapes box in this local Segment of Fox 6. FOX6 News Milwaukee started practicing shortness of breath regularly, along with palpitations and headaches... There has always been a black market for marijuana, but there are signs that this black market is starting to shift toward manufactured products for marijuana flower products, especially concentrates. In the 2019 report Arcview, a cannabis research analytics firm, noted that concentrates increased from 10 percent of the cannabis market in 2014 to 27 percent in 2019. In 2017, half of legal sales of concentrate in the US were vape products. Ian Stewart, a partner at California law firm Wilson Elser, discussed the cannabis lawsuits for the Cannabis Law Journal. He explains that he also sees changes: It happens every year. We see the flower as the overall share of products is declining, and more and more people are embracing manufactured products, Stewart says. In other words, vaping hemp concentrates has become extremely popular, and there are legitimate, licensed companies ready to use. Dank Vapes advertising on dankvapecartridges.org, where an illegal company claims to be recommended by doctors dankvapecartridges. There is also an illegal site: There are Mario Karts and Cereal Carts (carts is short for cartridges). And then there's Dank Vapes - a mysterious company that claims to be cutting over the rest. Onlinedankvapeshop.com, a website that claims to sell real Dank Vapes, offers this sales pitch: Although many of these products seem aesthetically similar at first glance, there are many nuances that distinguish them from each other. With Dank Vapes in the shorts (sic) bonus. People who claim to sell premium Dank Vapes get out of their way to make their products seem legitimate, even for people who buy them in states where cannabis is illegal. One page it sells: Although many of these products as recommended by doctors, and they claimed to be in partnership with Digamma Consulting – a cannabis consulting firm that connects licensed manufacturers with licensed laboratories. But when Inverse brought these claims to Digamma's attention, they explained, they are not aware of the Dank Vapes brand and have not spoken to anyone who claims to represent them. There are at least 22 accounts on Instagram under the name Dank Vapes. One of them, allegedly a real dank vapes account, is @dankvapesla, which has nearly 48,000 followers. @dankvapesla did not respond to Inverse's request for comment.) The rest of the accounts range from dozens of followers to several thousand. One of the reviewers of cannabis products, a 32-year-old who declined to give his last name, is hosting the stay high stay humble podcast. Inverse says that Dank Vapes still has a powerful charm, despite the fact that it doesn't seem to make anything other than colorful boxes. So many people have decided to copy the brand because it's so popular around the world, and many people are obsessed with the packaging itself, says the podcaster, who goes by the hallinco handle on social media. The Dank Vapes brand will continue to grow and grow in illegal states. They are cheaper, and even in states where legal drugs are taxed very highly, some people still prefer cheaper options on the black market. So many people have decided to copy the brand because it is so popular all over the world. A glance at dank vapes packaging clearly indicates what kind of consumer they are going after. The typical Dank Vapes box has holographic images of sports cartoon characters and favors such as Fruity Pebbles, Mars OG and Chemdog. Each of them will be at home in the store with the head or bedroom of the teenager. It is very popular with high school students, says Hoashi. It's unfortunate, but high schools are flooded with illegal things. It's just a reality that kids smoke weeds, and these cartridges are just a popular way to smoke weed these days. On June 18, a photo of Dank Vape's packaging appeared on Instagram and Facebook, along with a belcosta labs test, which showed that he had tested positive for fungicide fenhexamide. That Dank Vape was taken down from a high school kid in Southern California. Who is Dank Vapes? Anyone who claims to be the real Dank Vapes has had enough of the PR situation on their hands. When DeGrave showed that Dank Vape lied to the world, he roped them into a serious medical incident that led to at least one hospitalization. NBC called out Dank Vapes by name, and @DankVapesOil defended their turf. The Twitter One Twitter account that claims to be the real Dank Vapes is @DankVapesOil (846 followers at the time of this writing), which describes itself as the only official #DankVapes. So Inverse reached out to the user behind the account about it. (He wouldn't give a name, but they said they're based in California.) spoke to the @DankVapesOil @DankVapesOil but the account has been deleted. The main problem is where it happened. Our products are not available anywhere except California, mainly Los Angeles. So all you buy in any other state is someone illegally making counterfeit pens, probably with cheap oil, and then buying counterfeit boxes online and just saying they're real, says @DankVapesOil Inverse. We try to change boxes and things like that, but counterfeiters are always one step behind. It turns out that it is very difficult to support the claim that you are the real Dank Vapes. When Inverse asked @DankVapesOil to show proof that they were real Dank Vapes, they first responded: lol. What kind of proof do you want. @DankVapesOil makes a good point: It's ridiculously easy to get your hands on dank Vapes branded box or cassette, which you can then fill whatever you want. They just have a large packaging binder that you can buy. If you go down to downtown L.A., there's this whole area of counterfeiting hemp cartridges and goods. They just have a large packaging binder that you can buy, says Hoashi. But you don't even have to be in California. You can become a Dank Vape dealer from the comfort of your own home. Five hundred Dank Vapes boxes sell for about $180 on Amazon. Within days, Inverse had a pack of 30 delivered. There, as set out in our newsroom, there were all those famous flavors, from Jet OG to Chemdog that almost all boasted THC concentrations above 90 percent. There was also a taste of Rose Gold - the one that allegedly put DeGrave's brother in the hospital. This word forger means that somewhere out there, there are real Dank Vapes who are repeatedly tricked. But there is not a single person who can really apply for this title, at least legally. California is a state with a robust, mandatory licensing system that has become a leader for the weed industry. But dank vapes evidence can't be found anywhere in both industry and legal channels. The California Bureau of Cannabis Control did not issue a license for Dank Vapes. A spokesman confirmed to Inverse that there was no listing for Dank Vapes. The California Cannabis Industry Association said Inverse were not familiar with the company when we sent them photos of Dank Vapes packaging. That said, there is one government office that has heard of Dank Vapes. Both Dank Vapes and Dankwoods (the company reportedly associated with Dank Vapes) have trademarks filed with the patent office and U.S. trademarks for a standard trademark that can be sold on T-shirts, sweaters, or hats. This logo matches the one DeGrave showed to local fox partner and branding at Dank Vapes online retailers. They are both registered under the same name: Jake Lindsey. The trade mark was filed in January 2019, but those marks were used in trade in the earlier year. For Dank Vapes, the auction says it was first used in trading in January 2018. Inverse number listed in the trade mark list. Each time, he called four times before going to the answering machine, which did not provide a name or additional contact information. We've left a message and we'll update this story if and when we hear it. The Inverse also reached out to the California Attorney General's office to see if it intends to investigate this black market because the trademark is registered in the state and all signs point to this poisonous black market stemming from the state across the country. We'll update this story if the office responds. U.S. Patent and Trademark Office's listing for Dank Vapes. USPTO/Inverse When Inverse asked out the person behind @DankVapesOil's Instagram account why they differ from fake Dank Vapes, they explained that what makes real different from fakes is that they don't cut their products from other chemicals. Instead, when it comes to the world of Dank Vapes, the real thing is supposed to be synonymous with pure. But you just have to take the word of the seller – Dank Vapes boxes, filled by anyone who can get their hands on them, are not a guarantee that the product is consistently clean. Here's @dankbustersofficial: I've heard a lot of history and skepticism, but nothing is really confirmed about Dank Vapes, except that real and fake have all been tested dirty for many pesticides and some for heavy metals as well, they say. Dank Vapes is already a black market brand that is untested & no one knows what mixes into the distillate. The only way to tell if a product is really pure is to get results from a hemp testing lab. But because Dank Vapes is not a legally licensed brand, it is not overseen by the government, which requires rigorous testing in California. That's why hallinco, a podcaster, decided to avoid them, despite their cool tastes and cheap prices. Dank Vapes is already a black market brand that is untested & no one knows what is mixed in the distillate. That's why I decided to stop buying danki and stick to companies that provide test results, he says. But not everyone is such a demanding consumer. Especially in illegal states, the line between products like Dank Vapes and actual licensed and tested companies can be easily obscured – especially when illegal brands that have large social followers claim to be based in the legal state (California) and have slippery packaging. That's why lab results have become the currency of dankbusters - social media accounts that try to expose counterfeiters who reject real, licensed companies. But they also call Dank Vapes dealers, some of whom are cutting their carts with chemicals and shipping them across the country to people who may or may not know the risks they are taking. I used products on the black market for reasons of cost-effectiveness and I hurt myself in this way... Who are you going to call? Dankbusters People get into a damp meltdown for many different reasons. Reasons, personally felt the consequences of contaminated products. An Instagram account user explains that he used black market vapes for about six or seven months, mainly due to low costs. At the time, they say the danks went as cheap as $13 each. I used products on the black market for profitability reasons and ultimately harmed myself in this way, they say. I started to have regular shortness of breath, along with palpitations and headaches. Around this time, dankbustersofficial says there was another dankbuster in the game that now goes @datdude41510 on Instagram. But it's a new account. When datdude's first account was deleted, it claims to have had more than 42,000 followers. This new account has over 9800. On the r/oilpens subreddit, where Dank Vapes's (brand) id card is often a point of contention, one user praised the dankbuster as follows: This guy is a hero. Now, there is more than one dankbuster in the game, from datdude to dankbustersofficial to @dankusta, another account with 15,000 followers. Dankbustersofficial adds that the results of laboratory tests are more than necessary because there are serious harmful things in some of these products. Although these licensed labs work primarily with hemp companies, there are lab results for Dank Vapes floating around the Internet, too. Dankbustersofficial published them, as did niche sites such as internationalhighlife.com. Dankbusters are usually anonymous. But there are also more public attempts to clean up the illegal market. Hoashi and the Doja app is one example. Ever since Hoashi launched the Doja app two years ago, he explains that his mission has been to uncover contaminated vape cartridges and build awareness of the risks involved in purchasing them. So what we're doing is going out into illegal markets in California, so-called seshes, which are a bit like farmers' markets, and I just buy cartridges and send them to a state-certified lab and try to educate people about the dangers, he explains. At the moment, we are really pushing this initiative, where we are trying to raise awareness of the illegal market. BelCosta Labs is a third party that Hoashi sends these results, and he has developed a close partnership with Ronay – which adds that anyone who sees any of these online lab results can call their lab and they will check if they are warranted. Hoashi hopes that when people see the results of laboratory tests for cartridges that show clear contamination with pesticides or heavy metals, they may be discouraged from buying cartridges from fake companies. That's why he publishes the results of laboratory tests on social media. His account has more than 24,000 followers. It's worth trying to spread awareness, Ronay says, about the results of laboratory tests posted online. But we are still so far away from those people who buy products in illegal stores, in California they don't even know. I've heard about underground markets and illegal markets that collect taxes from people, and they it may look like a normal legal clinic, but in fact it is a black market store. From time to time, Dank Vape seems to pass a laboratory test (or at least appear online). But even a pure result for one taste of Dank Vape means little when hundreds of people fill the same package with different concentrates. No one oversees the quality control of a brand like Dank Vapes, so what's in every package is a mystery, even if the box looks the same. It only becomes more difficult to distinguish when you order in an untrained state. A licensed dispensary won't ship to a state where cannabis is illegal, but these fake brands claim to ship discreetly across state lines. I placed an order for 20 Dank Vapes cartridges to be delivered to my New York apartment. Within a few hours I got a text message asking for payment and a confirmation email. In other words, this Dank Vape dealer (who assured me that all the Danks were real) had no problems at all with shipping their ship across state lines. In other words, the black market is both extremely easy and cheap - so consumers are tempting to make a decision. Because of cases like DeGrave and online warnings from other Dank Vapers, they know it comes with risks. They don't want to play (too much) with their own health, they turn to dankbusters accounts for help. In March 2019, for example, hallinco made a real versus fake Dank Vapes video with over 500,000 views. In it, it passes through three seemingly identical packages of the Dank Vapes brand. I get a lot of emails & Instagram inboxes from people in the United States, Canada, & the UK with concerns about Dank Vapes, who I recently bought, says Inverse. Several people thanked me for saving lives because they had bad reactions to the fake Dank Vapes. I ordered Dank Vapes online, and they agreed that they sent them to my apartment in New York. InverseEven dankbusters are wary of cartridges sold inside the dank vapes box. The market is teeming with counterfeit products that provide cheap alternatives to people easily fooled by a good knockoff. If they don't have enough options [in the clinic], they'll go back to the black and grey markets and we see that happening every day, says dankbustersofficial. It will never be fixed... But one of the big problems with keeping people in the legal market is cost. When the marijuana industry is legalized in the state, it's about tax. Each state structures that tax slightly differently. For example, Washington is implementing a 37 percent tax on marijuana sales and New Jersey has 15 percent on cannabis and cannabis products. These rates increase prices, which is one of the reasons people turn to illegal things. In January, the Associated Press reported that some estimates suggest 80 percent of sales still remained under the table, despite legalisation. As more and more countries are considering legalising the hemp industry, new Throwin. In New Jersey, a bill to legalize the use of marijuana for adults in the state cited one of the lowest tax rates in the country at 10 percent. But this low tax rate has also inspired lawmakers to push back. I think for east coast states it's a real debate at the moment, Stewart says. It takes time to deal with the right tax rates to find a balance between income and keeping people in the illegal market. For now, cases like Patrick DeGrave's brother continue to send shockwaves through a strange, unregulated world full of rounds of mystery chemicals sold in Dank Vapes branded boxes. Chances are, even if new tax systems are being developed, people will continue to turn to the black market anyway, regardless of the risks to their own health. Of this, at least one dankbuster is certain. This will never be repaired, says dankbusta. This is the black market for you.
